For Kazakhstan, which has a large and extensive territory, regional policy has always been and is of great importance. The increased interest in regional politics is due to a number of objective reasons. So, it became obvious that the decade of economic growth of the Republic did not lead to a reduction in disproportions in the social and economic development of its regions, but, on the contrary, it strengthened them further. The solution of this objective required certain steps on the part of state authorities. Despite the fact that the economic crisis has made its own adjustments, the relevance of regional issues is not decreasing. Moreover, the crisis has manifested itself differently in different regions, and it is already impossible to ignore the existing inter-regional differences.

The cooperation was intensified with KEU and the Regional Development Research Institute concluded an agreement on the establishment of scientific and educational consortium. The result of this agreement was the active participation of the Institute's staff in the educational process in KEUK, as well as the implementation of scientific research on a joint basis by the staff of the Institute and KEUK.

Based on the results of the research, numerous scientific articles and monographs have been published: "The Strategy of Sustainable Development of the Social and Economic System of the Region", "Development of Institutional Partnership in the Public Sector of the Republic of Kazakhstan", "Innovative Development of the Economy".
